The Kornegay Family

The first Kornegays in America waded ashore in March 1710, naked and shivering. Less than two years later, all of them were slaughtered by Indians with the exception of one small boy. The Kornegays of Bibb County - and elsewhere in America - are all descended from that young orphan.

The Kornegays were Palatines, or people who came from that area of southwest Germany which includes the wine regions of the Rhine and Moselle valleys, the Black Forest and some of the loveliest country found on earth - a homeland to leave with reluctance.

But by 1709 this region had long been wracked by increasing wars fueled by religious differences and the power drives of the crowned heads of middle Europe. The brother of Louis XIV had been the latest to plunder the Palatines and his victims meant special trouble for those of the Protestant faith. The Kornegays were were to build and populate a town which would be surrounded by farmlands tilled by the Palatines.

The Palatines had a bad crossing. Many died during the winter voyage across the north Atlantic and their ship carried them off course to the mouth of the James River in Virginia. Here they were robbed by a boarding party from one of Louis XIV's warships. Everything was taken including the ship's rowboats and the clothes from their backs. The inhabitants of Jamestown were startled to see naked people wading ashore from the stripped vessel. But when they regained their composure, the people of Jamestown were kind to the "poor Palatines" and provided them with food, blankets and shelter.

After a few weeks in Jamestown, the Palatines set out overland, with guides thoughtfully provided by their benefactors, to find the Neuse River. When they arrived, they found their land had not been cleared of its Indian title, as de Graffenried had supposedly arranged, and indeed the Tuscaroras were in no hurry to vacate. By early summer, however, de Graffenried had arrived and matters had sufficiently progressed that a late crop was planted.

The settlers had no way of knowing it, but the Baron's finances were shaky and he was forced to mortgage the tract on which the Palatines had settled. Thus their land titles were unsound and were later lost by foreclosure. But a more disastrous event descended upon their ranks before they lost their land.

In September, 1711, when their first full-growth crop was ready for harvesting, the Tuscaroras swooped down on the settlement and massacred dozens of families. The Kornegay family, with the exception of George, a nine year old boy, was wiped out. Young George Koonce, also about nine years old, was the sole survivor of the Swiss family Koonce. The two Georges were taken away by the Tuscaroras but were freed by militiamen a few months later. The court at New Bern bound them out to Jacob Miller, a Swiss schoolmaster and justice of the peace at New Bern, who raised them.

Both Georges grew up and became landowners in North Carolina. George Kornegay was among those Palatines who appealed successfully to the English Crown for land grants to replace those which were lost to their families by foreclosure. By the time of his death in 1773, George Kornegay was owner of a large tobacco plantation in Duplin County, N. C. and large tracts in other counties. This section of North Carolina is still a leading tobacco growing region and Horace Kornegay, former North Carolina Congressman and a direct descendant of George Kornegay, is the current president of the Tobacco Institute of America.

Besides raising tobacco, George Kornegay also raised seven sons and a daughter - many of whose descendants still live in Duplin, Johnston and other counties of North Carolina. One son, Jacob Kornegay (c1732 - 1796), served as a captain in the North Carolina Revolutionary militia. Jacob had a son John (c1760 - 1823) who was married on August 2, 1783, in Duplin County, N. C., to his cousin, Sevil Kornegay, daughter of George Kornegay, Jr.

John and Sevil moved about 1810 from Duplin County, N. C. to Smith County, Tennessee, where John's brother-in-law, John Ward, was living. In 1818, when Alabama Territory was opened up for settlement, John and Sevil moved to old Cahawba County (now Bibb) and settled near Haysop Creek. There John died in 1823 and Sevil went to live with her son, Barney Kornegay (1798 - 1823), who was married in Bibb County in 1821 to Miss Sarah Lee (1800 - 1839).

The Kornegays thus became one of the pioneer families of western Bibb County where a number of that name and many other descendants, under other family names, are living today. A daughter of John and Sevil, Peggy Kornegay, was married to John Lee, possibly a brother of the Sarah who married Barney Kornegay, but Peggy's descendants, if any, are not known at this time. All of the known descendants of John and Sevil Kornegay are also descendants of their son Barney and his wife Sarah, who had four sons and seven daughters that survived infancy and grew up in Bibb County. The children of raised with George Kornegay and Sarah and their spouses were as follows:

1. Infant (b & d c1822)
2. Eady Kornegay (1823 - 1905) m. Jesse Miller
3. Peggy Kornegay (1826 - 1918) m. James Turner Murphy
4. Zilpha Kornegay (1827 - 1901) m. Jeremiah Reach

(Note: Material for this family history was obtained from court records of Duplin, Craven and Jones Counties of North Carolina and Bibb County, Alabama, published memoirs of Baron de Graffenried, family records of the Kornegays and other sources, with special debt to the writings of Mr. Charles H. Holloman, past president of the North Carolina Genealogical Society and the North Carolina Chapter of the Society of the Cincinnati. Mr. Holloman is a direct descendant of "the other boy" - George Koonce, who was raised with George Kornegay.)

Protestant

Queen Anne of England invited some of the Protestants to England to be settled from there in English colonies abroad. By mid 1709, a large encampment of Palatines waited hopefully outside London for further disposition. The Kornegays (originally spelled Knege) were among them.

At this time, Baron Christopher de Graffenried had acquired a large grant of land between the Neuse and Trent rivers in the Carolinas for the purpose of starting a settlement. He was permitted to pick about 100 families from the assembled Palatines on condition that he provide them with land for homesteads on his Carolina tract.

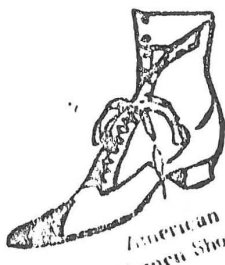

In January, 1710, about 600 Palatines set sail from England for Carolina. The Kornegays were among the chosen. The Baron was to
